

Kentucky Farmer's Markets.

The Center for Applied Anthropology at Northern Kentucky University has partnered with the Boone, Campbell, and Kenton County Conservation Districts for the past decade by conducting ethnographic fieldwork with Northern Kentucky communities on issues relating to the creation of conservation areas and invasive plant mitigation. Our current research includes cultural models of nature and climate change among farmers in Northern Kentucky.

Our community partners will use our results and recommendations to develop educational materials as well as construct policies relating to community development within Northern Kentucky.
